Our Method

For each pair of opposing teams, A and B, we calculated an index for each team based on the following -

1. Goals Scored
2. Home Advantage
3. Star Players
4. Coach
5. COVID-19

Then, we used the index values to predict the winning team.

Step 1: Goal-scoring Rate

For each pair of opposing teams, we filtered all FIFA qualifying matches since 1974 in which both teams played.

We calculated the weighted average of the number of goals scored by a particular team against all goals scored between both.

Step 2: Home Advantage

For each pair of opposing teams, we filtered all FIFA qualifying matches since 1974 in which both teams played.

We calculated the ratio of a team's win rate as the home team, against their win rate as the away team.

Step 3: Star Players

We treated every player with a rating above 83 as a star player.

For each country, we found their youngest star player and calculated the country's win rate since this player was 18 years old - assuming this is when they started playing.

Step 4: Coaches

For each country, we found the date that their current coach started coaching the team.

We calculated the win rate of each country since this date.

Step 5: COVID-19

For each continent, we found the date on which COVID-19 first impacted them.

We calculated the win rate of each country since this date, based on the continent.

Compared to 2018 FIFA

If we exclude the FIFA hosts (Qatar in 2022 and Russia in 2018) then 24 of the 31 teams that we predicted, played in the 2018 FIFA World Cup.

Compared to 2014 FIFA

If we exclude the FIFA hosts (Qatar in 2022 and Brazil in 2014) then 21 of the 31 teams that we predicted, played in the 2014 FIFA World Cup.

Assumptions & Limitations

- Any matches prior to 1974 would be irrelevant because the oldest (active) soccer player played their first match in 1974.
- There is no home advantage factor if we don't know which team is the home team.
- If teams drew, we used external data to decide the winner.
